

I have mitigating circumstances, do I have to tell my school the specific problem?

Last Modified on 23/11/2017 3:38 pm GMT

You should always let your School know about any mitigating circumstances or they won't be able to take into account how this might have affected your work.

The sooner you let your School know about any problems the better. The longer you leave it the harder it could be for them to find solutions to help you. It's worth noting that marks are never altered because of mitigating circumstances.

If you don't want to discuss your problem with your School...

Come and chat to us at LUU Advice. We're independent from the University and we won't tell anyone about your problems unless you give us permission. We can help you decide what you want to do and help you get in touch with your School if you need us to.

Contact Details

advice@luu.leeds.ac.uk

0113 3801 423
